

The strategy of the poor to protect their life in Bangladesh

貧困層の暮らしを守る戦略-バングラデシュのフィールド調査から

In developing countries, people have more risk to fall into poverty when they have shocks such as illness or disaster. This is because in developing countries the social security system provided by the government is not sufficient. And especially the poor is more exposed to risks. This presentation provides the survey result of micro health insurance provided by a microfinance institution in Bangladesh. The presentation also aims to make an attempt to discuss the possibility of building an improved safety net with mutual help, for example with the activities of a producers association, saving group, and rice bank, which have been created there by the people themselves.
